Jennifer Kim Field is the Chief Sustainability Officer for Henry Schein, Inc., the world's largest provider of solutions for health care professionals. Jen is responsible for the Company's global sustainability and environmental, social and governance (ESG) work and integrating ESG into the Company's strategies and activities. Jen collaborates with the Company's Board of Directors, the Sustainability Committee, and key business teams such as Investor Relations, Supply Chain, Finance, Legal, Human Resources, Global Data Organization, and Corporate Communications as well as external partners to execute the global climate roadmap including carbon reduction goals, ensure our progress and performance meet evolving global auditing and regulatory requirements, and attract new investors focused on corporate sustainability. She oversees the Henry Schein Cares team and program focused on equitable access to quality health care, building capacity in the delivery of health care services, and emergency preparedness to "help health happen" for at-risk and underserved populations globally. Jen brings over 25 years of experience to Henry Schein in the areas of business development, program management, strategic planning, corporate philanthropy and strategic partnerships. Prior to joining Henry Schein, Jen worked at the United Nations Foundation where she led public-private partnerships with Fortune 500 companies in support of the UN. Jen hails from Alabama, where she acquired a taste for grits and fried catfish. She graduated from Bowdoin College and lives on Long Island with her husband and two children.
