

The Conference Board Embargo Policy

Access to The Conference Board's embargoed economic releases, including the Consumer Confidence Index[®] and The Conference Board Leading Economic Index[®] for the U.S. and the Euro Area, and The Conference Board Employment Trends Index[™], is limited to accredited media who give their chief attention to the gathering and reporting of news. Applicants must be employed by major news organizations that regularly publish or broadcast a substantial volume of news material for public consumption and are required to enter into an Embargo Agreement with The Conference Board.

Embargoed news releases may not be released to the public or data subscribers by any means (including print, broadcast, Internet, podcasts, blogs, wire, or in any other form) before the specified date and time of release.

Failure to adhere to terms of The Conference Board's Embargo Agreement may result in removal of embargo privileges. If a media organization breaches the embargo under the Embargo Agreement or otherwise violates such agreement, The Conference Board reserves the right in its sole discretion to take whatever steps it determines are appropriate based on the facts and circumstances of the particular violation, including imposing an indefinite or permanent suspension of privileges.

If an embargo is broken, The Conference Board will immediately release the data to the public. In addition, The Conference Board will inform the U.S. Securities and Exchange Commission of the embargo breach.
