

Danylo Jaworsky

Senior Director

Committee for Economic Development, the public policy center of The Conference Board (CED)

djaworsky@tcb.org

As the Senior Director at the Committee for Economic Development (CED) of The Conference Board, Dan plays a pivotal role in enhancing the organization's daily operations and driving strategic initiatives. With over a decade of experience at The Conference Board, Dan has transitioned through various roles, showcasing his versatility and commitment to the organization's success.

In his current capacity, Dan collaborates with senior leadership to analyze and optimize daily operations, ensuring the seamless functioning of CED. His responsibilities extend to the development and implementation of CED's strategic and operating plans, aiming to elevate the organization's visibility and impact on policy positions and initiatives. Dan spearheads outreach efforts, engaging with key stakeholders such as senior public policy officials in the U.S. Congress and the Executive Branch, as well as the broader public policy and business community.

Dan's journey at The Conference Board has been marked by a diverse range of roles, from event marketing and logistics to operations and strategy for executive peer networks (Councils). His broad experience includes working closely with senior executives, including C-suite leaders, across various functions. Dan has a track record of successfully launching innovative products, from conceptualization and exploration to market implementation. Notable among these are the Chief Data Officers Council, Intelligent Automation Executives, and Chief Digital Officers Council.

Dan's educational background includes a Bachelor of Business Administration in international business and marketing from The George Washington University. He furthered his academic pursuits with a Master of Science in information and knowledge strategy from Columbia University in the City of New York.

