Francine McKenna

Adjunct Professor, International Business
American University, Kogod School of Business

Francine McKenna is an independent journalist and commentator on the accounting, audit, and corporate governance issues affecting public and pre-IPO private companies. McKenna authors the newsletter "The Dig," where she scrutinizes accounting, audit, and corporate governance issues at public and pre-IPO companies. She is also an adjunct professor of international business in the MBA program at American University's Kogod School of Business in Washington, DC, and regularly teaches a graduate course in accounting ethics for the Ohio State University Fisher College of Business. Before turning to journalism and academia, McKenna spent more than 20 years in public accounting and consulting.