Fiona Liu is an Economist at The Conference Board China Center for Economics and Business. Fiona is responsible for providing analysis and insights into China's economy and business environment, with a particular focus on China’s consumption and labor market research.

Fiona has experience in both the public and private sectors. Prior to joining The Conference Board, Fiona worked as a consultant at the Asia Development Bank and an economic analyst at Teck Resources based in Beijing where she covered research on a range of topics, including China’s long-term potential growth prospects; China’s demographic challenges; and China’s regional development.

Fiona’s current research interests include key drivers of China’s long-term growth, economic and business implications of China’s labor force development, and the evolving of consumption patterns of Chinese consumers. Fiona holds a master's degree in economics from the University of Waterloo, Canada, and a bachelor's degree of economics from the University of Western Ontario, Canada.
