Opening Remarks

11:05 – 11:30 am (ET)
Talent Acquisition’s Transformation Following the Global Pandemic
COVID-19 has changed the way work gets done at most organizations and many have transitioned to remote work for all employees who can work from home. Most talent acquisition (TA) and onboarding functions have had to dramatically transform their processes, many moving to primarily virtual recruiting and onboarding. These changes are especially acute now that the labor market is historically tight and remote work has become part of many organizations’ employee value proposition. In addition, many organizations are now relying more on their TA teams to help them manage internal mobility.

This session will focus on lessons learned during COVID-19 as the TA and onboarding functions rethink their future strategies.

Robin Erickson, Ph.D., Principal Researcher, The Conference Board

11:35 – 11:55 am (ET)
Staffing Up for COVID-19 Vaccine Rollout
Retail pharmacies have played a vital role in administering COVID-19 vaccines, and CVS Health—the largest pharmacy chain in the U.S., with nearly 10,000 locations—has hired an army of vaccinators, including nearly 30,000 pharmacists and 60,000 pharmacy technicians to meet the goal of providing the vaccine at all retail locations as the supply becomes available in the future done the hiring necessary to put shots in arms.

Hear how CVS ramped up hiring and deployed staff to provide essential services for communities across the nation.

Making the Case for a Talent Marketplace: A Sunk Costs Approach
At Lockheed Martin, a talent marketplace approach would require significant cultural change along with updates to technology, policies and practices. With that much change, even getting agreement to begin the exploration can be difficult.

This session will share how the business case was made with data to acknowledge the current “sunk cost” of today’s status quo, which motivated enough desire to look for new solutions.

Andrew A. Schmidt, PhD, Director, Enterprise Talent Acquisition, Lockheed Martin
